Manchester Metropolitan University Trip

On Wednesday 1st March, class 11 and class 10's year 5's set off on their journey to Manchester Metropolitan University. After an ordinary bus ride to the centre of Manchester, we set off for the Piccadilly Gardens tram station. With a few bewildered looks from commuters, we boarded the tram to the Etihad Campus. We then trooped up a set of stairs to reach the stadium: a towering oval of concrete, plastered with blue posters. Surrounded by booths of many kinds, we made our way around the sports ground, back to where we left our first tram. Soon after, we landed on the Piccadilly Gardens station; where we were to begin our 40-minute hike. I was surprised none of us fainted as we trekked along the wet, winding streets of the city. We must have stopped at least ten times for Mr McKean to count us. When we finally arrived at the MMU, the first thing we did...was eat! Then, we marched through the revolving doors leading into the university. With a minimal introduction, we were whisked up in the glass elevator and split into two groups. There were six science experiments that the trainee teachers would explain to us: elephant's toothpaste, phlubber and bouncy balls, Cartesian divers, film pot explosions and how snails eat. The safety goggles we wore made us feel like we were actual scientists in a laboratory. By Ademola
